1       (a) GOALS OF ASSISTANCE.—United States foreign
2 assistance should be designed to further the national inter-
3 ests of the United States by achieving the following inter-
4 related and mutually-reinforcing goals:

5           (1) Reduce global poverty and alleviate human
6 suffering.

7           (2) Advance peace and mitigate crises.

8           (3) Support human rights and democracy.

9           (4) Build and reinforce strategic partnerships.

10          (5) Combat transnational threats.

11          (6) Sustain the global environment.

12          (7) Expand prosperity through trade and in-
13 vestment.

1           (4) In an increasingly interdependent world, the
2           health, prosperity, freedom, and security of the peo-
3           ple of the United States are strengthened when the
4           people of all countries can enjoy these same advan-
5           tages.

6           (5) United States foreign assistance should be
7           designed to help build the capacity of other countries
8           to meet the needs of their people and to conduct
9           themselves responsibly in the international system.

10          (6) Foreign assistance is not only a reflection of 11          the values, generosity, and goodwill of the people of 12          the United States, but also an essential means for 13          achieving United States foreign policy, economic,
14          and national security objectives.
